

Congress patterned Section 504 on Title VI of the Civil Rights Act, which prohibits discrimination based on race. Programs or activities receiving federal financial assistance may not deny a benefit or service solely on grounds of a person's handicap, just as they may not deny a benefit or service on grounds of a person's race.

Regulations governing federally assisted programs or activities of health care providers implement the nondiscrimination approach of Section 504 by stating that "a recipient may not, on the basis of handicap . . . (d)eny a qualified handicapped person these benefits or services. . . ." 45 CFR 84.52(a).

Section 504 applies when (1) a handicapped person is qualified to receive benefits or services from a federally assisted program or activity and (2) these benefits or services are denied because of the person's handicap.

In the context of health care services provided to handicapped infants, a handicapped infant is qualified to receive those benefits and services that are (1) generally provided by the program or activity, and (2) are appropriate, in the exercise of reasonable medical judgment, to the circumstances of the particular handicapped infant.

Section 504 does not intrude upon legitimate medical judgment. A handicapped infant is not "qualified" to receive medical care or treatment that is contrary to reasonable medical judgment—i.e., "medically contraindicated."

Not all judgments made by a health care provider, however, are medical judgments. For example, a judgment not to treat a black infant because of the infant's race is not a medical judgment. A judgment not to treat a physical complication in a Down's syndrome infant because the infant suffers the handicap of Down's syndrome is likewise not a medical judgment.

The Secretary does not interpret Section 504 to apply to any case in which care or treatment is withheld on the basis of legitimate medical judgment. If a particular form of treatment is of dubious medical benefit to the patient or if the patient could not long survive even with the treatment, reasonable medical judgment could withhold the treatment, and Section 504 does not require that the treatment be given. Section 504 does not compel medical personnel to attempt to perform impossible or futile acts or therapies. Thus, Section 504 does not require the imposition of futile therapies which merely temporarily prolong the process of dying of an infant born terminally ill.

For example, a child born with anencephaly will inevitably die within a short span of time; therefore, treatment to correct life-threatening complications may be withheld. Such withholding is on the basis of the legitimate medical judgment that the child would die imminently even with the treatment. The decision to withhold treatment is therefore not based on handicap, and is not prohibited by Section 504.

Also, a decision to withhold extraordinary care from an extremely low-birthweight infant does not implicate Section 504 if the decision is based on a reasonable medical judgment concerning improbability of success in a course of treatment, or risks and potential harm in the course of treatment.

At the same time, the basic provision of nourishment, fluids, and routine nursing care is a fundamental matter of human dignity, not an option for medical judgment. Even if a handicapped infant faces imminent and unavoidable death, no health care provider should take upon itself to cause death by starvation or dehydration. Routine nursing care to provide comfort and cleanliness is required to respect the dignity of such an infant. To deny these forms of basic care to handicapped individuals would constitute discrimination contrary to Section 504.

For those handicapped infants, on the other hand, who could live if given treatment for a life-threatening congenital anomaly, any decision to withhold treatment which is based on the infant's handicap rather than on a medical judgment, constitutes discrimination contrary to Section 504. Section 504 prohibits any denial of benefits or services because of a handicap such as mental retardation, blindness, paralysis, deafness, or lack of limbs. Any judgment that a person is not worthy of treatment due to such handicap is not, of course, a medical judgment, even if made by doctors within a medical facility.

A clear violation of Section 504 occurs if a federally assisted program or activity denies a benefit or service to a handicapped infant that would be provided but for the individual's handicap. The Secretary deems the following to be examples—not a comprehensive list—of denials of treatment that constitute a violation of Section 504.

(1) Down's Syndrome with intestinal obstruction, denial of surgery to correct obstruction. Current medical practice on the United States is to correct intestinal atresia in infants with no other congenital anomaly. See 60 Pediatrics 588, 591 (1977). Any decision not to correct intestinal atresia in a Down's Syndrome child, unless an additional complication medically warrants such decision, must be deemed a denial of services based on the handicap of Down's Syndrome. The same reasoning applies to a case of Down's Syndrome with esophageal atresia, and the denial of surgery to correct atresia. Any refusal to give treatment to a Down's Syndrome infant for other physical complications, such as operable heart defects, if such complications would be treated for children without Down's Syndrome, similarly constitutes a violation of Section 504.

(2) Denial of care or treatment that would be given to a non-handicapped infant, on grounds that a particular infant is potentially mentally impaired, or blind, or deaf, or paralyzed, or lacking limbs.

(3) Denial of treatment for medically correctable physical anomalies in children born with Spina Bifida, when such denial is based on anticipated mental impairment, paralysis, or incontinence of such child, rather than on reasonable medical judgments that treatment would be futile or too unlikely of success given complications in the particular case.
